Message from the Chief Editor

It is evident that Nepal is undergoing the process of all-out transformation of the society amid persistent gap of resources and knowledge. To fulfill this gap, Nepal needs to continue with the external resources mobilization for financing, sustaining and institutionalizing the development activities as well as their outcomes. Development effectiveness in line with home-grown development plan and policy is a must to cause impacts on lives of the people.

Obviously, policy formulation is a time-consuming task. We have long been working hard for a consensual Foreign Aid Policy document in hand. The existing Foreign Aid Policy, 2002 has definitely been providing insights not only for maintaining quality and consistency in aid related decision making but in revelation of the Government's stances on priority, quality and modality of external resources mobilization, so far. Besides, it has supplemented the implementation of the then 10th and subsequent periodic plans.

Our deep-rooted desires for owning and leading our own development processes have further been surfaced after we have become signatory to the international resolves, started from Rome through Paris and Accra to Busan, for aid and development effectiveness. We have been noticing the similar concerns on part of our development partners. Findings of monitoring and evaluation of the aid effectiveness initiatives on both global and local levels have added new dynamics leaving the existing policy document far behind. Many more new and revolutionary principles are found standing on queue to be customized and internalized through appropriate policy instrument. The Approach Paper for 13th plan and the Budget Speech 2013/14 have also made commitment to produce a revised and updated Foreign Aid Policy (FAP) by the end of this Fiscal Year.

At this backdrop, Ministry of Finance has been working on to bring a new Foreign Aid Policy that reflects the emerging aid dynamics in it and also caters the need for country led effective aid mobilization. An outline of the same has been already shared with the development partners in the local donors meeting held in April 30, 2013. The IECCD team has recently organized high-level interaction in the Ministry of Finance on August 29, 2013, with the team of National Planning Commission and with all the secretaries of the Government of Nepal. The feedbacks received from the participants have been incorporated in the new FAP as far as they are meritorious. Now we are aiming to circulate a complete draft of the new FAP, most likely in a new nomenclature, in the next local donors meeting. Despite the Country being election-focused, Ministry of Finance is confident on the fact that the reform and development is a continuous process and cannot wait until politics gets stabilized.

We expect that all the stakeholders in the country will provide strong back-up for promulgation of new aid policy. We are thankful to the respected Government Secretaries and high level officials for their valued inputs. As we are still in the consultation process, we will be more than happy to receive more suggestions on the draft from our respected readers.

Thank you!

Consultation Meeting

who substantially contributed to the draft.

Many participants sensed alien flavor in the word “Foreign Aid” used in the title of policy document, it was suggested to replace it with new names such as Development Finance Policy, Development Cooperation Policy etc or some other similar terms. Some of them wanted to have a page of background text in the policy document while others wanted to see it in form of a concise and succinct policy contents without much background and descriptions.

In spite of some varied sector-specific concerns, all the participants were in favor of greater compliance with the aid effectiveness principles; identifying areas as well as thresholds for grants and loans mobilization; prioritizing infrastructure sectors for aid-funded projects, ensuring transparency in NGO/INGO operation and so on.

Majority of the participants were keen to identify some long-term vision statement for the policy instead of the proposed vision as to graduate from LDC to developing country status by 2022. It was almost agreed that aid should gradually be reduced in the long-run through linking it with strengthening of revenue mobilization capacity, trade and investment. At the same time participants accepted that total exit from aid is not possible in this globally interdependent society. To achieve development effectiveness, efficient and transparent aid management with massive use of IT is a must. Participants went for emphasizing on-treasury aid, donor’s division of labor on basis of comparative advantage, south-south cooperation among relevant developing countries, use of sector-wide or sub sector-wide approach of financing, staff retention strategy and identifying some concrete measures for mutual accountability, where capacity of both the Government and donors can be evaluated.

GoN Secretaries and Officials

Hon. Finance Minister Shankar Prasad Koirala wrapped up the consultation with his valued remarks. Hon. Minister told the participants that the aid policy, being an umbrella policy, should give directions at least for 10 to 20 years. This level of active participation for such a long hour, per se, is kind of endorsement of the policy. As next steps, Hon. Minister instructed to produce the revised draft accommodating the valid concerns and get back to the participants, soon. Concluding the meeting, Hon. Minister said, - “You are the main actors of development, we are just facilitator, we will seek political consent on policy document and turn towards the donors for their concerns, if any”.
